World chess match drawing to a showdown

In the Moscow world chess championship the last quarter of the contest between Anatoly Karpov and Carri Kasparov has begun. After 10 games out of the total of 24, the conten-der is well ahead, having consolidated his lead by winning another point. The score is now 10.5—8.5 in his favour.

The eighteenth game was played later than planned because the contender took his second time out.

Everyone realized that the two men had properly thought out all their possible moves. This meant that White (Karpov) would undoubtedly seek to win and that Black would try and damp the offensive. This proved

NEW INTERPRETATION OF ABM TREATY: UNACCEPTABLE

Washington. In the area of in-ternational political relations the Washington administration's new interpretation of the treaty on the Limitation of Anti-Ballistic Missile Systems has an effect comparable to a destructive earthquake. This view was recently expressed by Republican Senators John Chafeo and Charles Mathias. This position of the administration, they said, should be revised. The new interpretation of the ABM Treaty will be used by the United States to justify its move from laboratory tests to designing weapons for a large-scale antiinissile system with space-based elements. Senator Maihias declared that the United States should adhere to previously worked-out poli-cies. This is the wrong time to arbitrarily modify an arms control agreement which has been the most effective over the entire post-war period, Chafee stated in his turn. As long as the new interpretation of the ABM Treaty remains the administration's official policy, he continued, there will always be a danger that the United States might change its course at any

The paironage which the authorities in Bann are extending to the revenge-seekers is not contined to ostensible support of their mass events. Exploitation of new oil and gas fields and other deposits discovered recently in the estuary of the Lena near the Kirenga and the Vitim (Eastern Siberia) has begun. The samples have shown that

CPSU Programme spells out active social policy

Gleb SPIRIDONOV

The new wording of the CPSU Programme, the draft of which is ready for a nationwide discusslop, preserves as invariable the Party's social policy based on an work and well-being. The implementation of this policy over the past quarter of a century dramatically raised the living standards of the Soviet people. Their real incomes have gone up lwo and a half times. There has been corresponding increase in the consumption of goods and services. More than 250 million sing conditions. Society has assumed the upkeep of all those who cannot earn their living Dynamic imputus has been given to the development of culture, education, and liealth service Other social problems have also been solved in a consistent way

Today, raising the living standards of the Soviet people is secoming an increasingly urgen in the very economi progress of the country and one of the most important prerequ sites for accelerating gress in science and technology and for a rapid growth in pro duction. In view of this, the new wording of the Party Programme mys more attention to socia

The CPSU proceeds from the fact that the Party must have a strong social policy which would encompass all aspects o human life — from conditions of work and everyday life, health and pastimes to social, class, an allonality relations.

Over the past two and a hal decades, the broad introduction of advanced technologies, auto mallon and mechanized production has resulted in profour changes in workers' jobs. The work done by the bulk of skill-ed workers is approaching the intellectual work of engineering and technical staff. Yet, a considerable number of industrial workers are allil doing manual jobs involving less skill. The plans for the socio-economic development in the near fuure provide for the creation o conditions necessary for highly productive creative work, putt ng production on a qualitative y new technical basis. Broad in troduction of comprehensive automation, robotics, and microelectronics will enable millions of people to work in more fav-ourable conditions with higher

At the same time, growing re ulrements are made on the echnical knowledge and exper itse of the working class and peasants, as radical improve-ments become essential in the training and improvement of skills in the society's main labour force. Today, there are 825 people with a higher and secondary education (complete or of the country's population or the country pullion people learn new trades and professions, or refresh their skills. All this sets forth the task of a serious reconstruction of personant training all the way from secondary and vocational schools to colleges and universities.

On the whole, the active social policy of the CPSU fits the detailed theory for accelerating the socio-economic development of the country development of the country development stantisted by the Party.

SOCIOLOGISTS STUDY RURAL FAMILIES

Statistical data are indicative of the fact that the welfare of the Soviet people living in the rutal areas is constantly raising, quality of their life is becoming higher and conditions of ille are improving—writes MOSKOV-SKY KOMSOMOLETS. Against the background of these transformations the social make-up of modern rural iamilies is also changing.

Many newly-married couples start to live as a family in the home of the parents of a spouse. What relations can be established between the younger and the older generations? Research shows that "old tolks" render considerable help to their adult offsprings in keeping the house and bringing up grandchildren. Normally mulual understanding and respect are characteristic of relations between the older and middle generations. polls indicate that in 95 per cent of the iamilies adult children respect opinions of their parents and in 90 per cent - parents seek the advice of their children. But of course, in the majority of cases the "newly-weds" prefer to have their own home and there is nothing (impossible about it. Every family is entitled to a public loan (amounting to the full cost of a house) repayable within 25 years. But this is not all. It a husband and his wife show zeal for their work at a col-lective farm, half of the loan may be payed from the lunds of the coaperative society. Our country invariably pursues a policy aimed at achieving nation-wide impro-vement on the standard of living. In secont years, for example, allowances granted to families at the birth of a child have been raised. Mothers are entitled to exlended materally leaves, during which they are paid part of their wages or salaties till a child aliains its life birthday. The network of pre-school establishments has been expanded throughout the country. These and other measures, intended to help families in general and mothers in particular, have resulted in a higher birth tale. Another positive trend is being singled out by sociologists: in recent years fewer young families migrate from the countryside to cities.

BIOLOCATION WINS RECOGNITION

Biolocation elisct was known in ancient Egypt and since then people have been tirelessly arguing about the rdinary ability of a man to spot subterranean waiers and ore deposits using a rod or a metal frame.

Now, however, writes the newspaper TRUD, biolocation is gradually winning official recognition and it is not accidental that an experimental and methodolo unit on biolocation research has been operating since 1980 within the framework of the association. Sevukr gla. There is no other body of the kind in the USSR. It was not an easy task to tear down the barrier of distrust and convince people that biolocation unit was necessary. The whole thing was settled after geological prospecting and hydrogeological studies had carried out in extremely difficult terrain conditions in Dophase (likering). According to the furnished by biological Donbass (Ukraine). Accurate data lurnished by biolocation technique made it possible to save 15 thousand ng alone. Practical research showed that an experienced operator can locate ore-bearing veins buried as deep as 500 metres, major gas pockets can be spotted at a depth of several km. Biolocation method helps locale karst openings, spot breaks in underground cables and heating mains. Some time ago the unit signed a contract with the Kiev system authority, under which specialists inspected 170 km of underground pipes. The operators located the damaged sections so quickly and accurately, that the unit was requested to train several specialists for the Kiev healing system.

INSTITUTE TO PROMOTE REANIMATION

The institute of General Reanimation is a new scientilic research centre just set up in Moscow, reports the newspaper MOSKOVSKAYA PRAVDA. It deals with the so-called clinical death during which the heart with the so-cated clinical death during which the heart and breathing half following severe injury, sharp pain, electric shock, sudden aramps of the blood vessels and a host of other similar factors. Today, scientists have found out that the heart may be residented several hours. aller death and that breathing our be restored in thirty-to lorly minutes. They now have an extensive armoury of methods which can help take a human being out of the state of clinical death.

The newspaper says that the centre will have two linked reanimation sections — experimental and clinical. It may seem unexpected that one of the centre's main tasks, apart from reanimation, is prevention of clinical death, stresses the newspaper. The very possibility of this sort of approach is favoured by the ramified network of reanimation services throughout the country. Today, a major hospital is inconcetvable without a specialist who would, at a critical moment, save a patient from clinical death. A specialist like this possesses a special knowledge and has diverse reanimation equipment at his disposal. One of the tasks of the new institute is to reiresh the skills and knowledge of medical personnel. Today, every doctor regardless of his speciality must know how to use reanimation techniques in the same way as a general practitioner must be able to perform an uncomplicated surgical operation. Devising such simple, precise, and efficient Other task of the new institute.

CHEETAH RETURNS TO ITS HABITAT

A young cheelah born at the Moscow Zoo has been sent by plane to the Bukhara specialized nursery, where Middle Asian gazelles (steppe antelopes) are bred, writes PRAVDA VOSTOKA, a newspaper published in the Soviet Republic of Uzbekistan. Uzbek naturalish have decided to reproduce the stock of this rate and beautiful animal, entered in the International Red Data Book, in the deserts of Central Asia - the ancient hubital of cheetahs.

Due to careful altention of the scientists the stock of Middle Asian gazelles has increased tentold here in the last seven years. Last spring to avoid overcrowding, the gazelle herd was partially moved to the Askante Nova preserve, Naturalists believe that cheetahs, the population of which will be taken under control, will not be determined. detrimental to the breeding of other animals, but, acling at a natural sanilary service, they will rather con-tribute to a healthier ecological situation. In other words, they will perform the duty prepared for them by Mother Nature.
